Hazardous Weather

A few severe storms may develop ahead of a dryline and cold front late Thursday afternoon. If storms can develop, large hail and damaging winds will be possible.

There is a small chance of thunderstorms along and east of a dryline this afternoon across portions of North and Central Texas. Areas most likely to see an isolated storm this afternoon are included in the yellow shaded area, which includes locations approximately along the Interstate 35 corridor. While most locations will NOT see any storms today, if any storm develops, it is very likely to become severe. The primary hazards associated with a severe storm this afternoon are very large hail and locally damaging winds. The best window for thunderstorms is from 4 to 7 pm today.
